

Living at Home or Living on your own

Almost all children live with their family until they grow up because they have to learn many things from their parents. However, they have to live by themselves when they become over 20 years old because of some reasons. First, they can be independent compared to living with their family. The reason is that they have to manage their housework and time. For instance, if they want to eat some food, they have to cook something by themselves, which means they have to do all housework by themselves. Second, they can know how serious housework is, and they will appreciate their parents. Even if they did not do anything when they were in their parent's home, they must do all housekeeping. Thus, they can feel gratitude for their parents. Third, they do not have to pay attention to other families, so they can have free time. For example, if they have to do homework with their friends, they may worry about others. However, if they live by themselves, they can control their time, so they do not have to pay attention to others. To sum up, I think children have to live on their own because they can be independent, and they can know how to live by themselves. Therefore, it is clear that children should live by themselves when they become over 20.
